Denver, CO (June 29, 2020) — Design Pickle, a leading creative subscription service, released information today about their ongoing partnership with Energize Colorado, a nonprofit organization, designed to help Colorado's entrepreneurs, small businesses, gig-workers, and nonprofits recover and rise from the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Through the partnership, Design Pickle and Energize Colorado create fundraising materials, marketing templates, and organizational charts, all of which aim to articulate and spread the message of their work.

"Over the past few months, we've relied heavily on Design Pickle to amplify our initiatives — with their help, we're able to completely focus on making a difference for small business owners, rather than worrying about the details of design collateral," says Elizabeth Kosar, Communications Advisor at Energize Colorado.

"We've navigated the ups and downs of the pandemic like any other business, but have been fortunate enough to rebound and experience growth. We know others are not as lucky," says Russ Perry, Design Pickle Founder and CEO. "We feel it is our responsibility to pay it forward and help these businesses, and that's exactly what we've been able to do through our partnership with Energize Colorado."

The two organizations plan to mobilize additional initiatives and projects to alleviate the economic impact of the pandemic.
